2 PLAYS IN BRUA CHAPEL TONIGHT

"Candida" and "One's Enough" to be Staged by Owl and Nightingale Players.

Tonight in Brua Chapel the Owl and Nightingale Dramatic Club of Gettysburg College will present "Candida" and "One's Enough." The first play is the work of George Bernard Shaw and is supposed to be a finished product in proper presentation of drama. The three principals in the cast are Miss Hankey who plays the part of Candida Morell, wife of James Morell, a clergyman who is portrayed by E. J. Wagner. The poet who is in love with Morell's wife is in real life C. S. Thomas. The cast is exceptionally well balanced and one of the best exhibitions of acting will most likely be seen tonight when the curtain rises on "Candida."

The plot of the story deals with the eternal triangle, two men and a woman. Eugene Maeshanks, the young poet, is in love with Candida and with a poet's insight divines that Candida is not happy with her husband who is an exceptional parson and a wonderful speaker but who lacks the qualities that are supposed to be found in a man. The young poet loses himself in his love and a scene occurs between the practical parson and the idealistic poet. Candida is the subject under discussion and like in the days of Robin Hood and other chivalrous characters she must choose between the two.

The play has been well rehearsed as the cast has been working hard for weeks under the direction of Dr. R. A. Arms. The costumes and scenic effects are perhaps the best that have ever been seen on the chapel platform. Everything points to a most successful play and a full house is expected.

One Act Comedy

Before the presentation of "Candida" a one act play entitled "One's Enough," prize play of 1926 by Robert Kase, will be presented. It is a refreshing and true to life comedy about the trials and tribulations of a college man at Junior Prom time. There is a continuous opportunity for laughs in the course of the playlet. It is well written and the action is fast and furious. The whole plot summed up in a few words is that Jack, a college student of Gettysburg, finds himself on the day of the Junior Prom with three girls on his hands. The action in trying to rid himself of the extra two forms the basis of the play. Just how he succeeds, or whether he does or not, will be seen in Brua Chapel this evening. This play will begin at eight o'clock and will be followed by "Candida." The cast of both plays follows:

Mr. James Morell E. J. Wagner
Candida Morell Miss Hankey
Eugene Marshbanks C. S. Thomas
Prosephine Garnett Miss Weaver
Alexander Mills L. R. Tabor
Mr. Burgess G. S. Beck

$100,000 HIGH SCHOOL IS SOON READY FOR USE

Senior Class May Hold Graduation Exercises In New Spacious Auditorium.

With the masonry work completed and much of the carpentry out of the way, rapid progress is being made in the building of Gettysburg's new $100,000 high school at the playground. Indications at present are that the building may be completed in time for the senior class to hold its graduation exercises in the auditorium.

Plasterers, concreters, carpenters and persons installing the heating plant are now busy at their respective tasks, with all indications pointing to the completion of the building by early spring. The first coat of dark plaster has been given the second floor and much of the first floor.

One of the two large heating units of the vapor system has been placed in operation to warm the building for the workers, and has been found to be working satisfactorily.

Is Modern Building

Built under the rigid plans and specifications of the state department of education, the new building embodies the latest improvements in the art of high school architecture. Large, well-lighted and well-ventilated classrooms will more than amply take care of the present needs of the town's army of high school children, which each year is augmented by many boys and girls from the rural districts.

The auditorium, designed to seat 630 persons, with a large stage at one end, will be one of the features of the new building. Assemblies, high school theatricals and graduation exercises will be held in the auditorium.

In the basement is the gymnasium, with a seating capacity for approximately 600 spectators. Separate locker rooms for boys and girls flank the gymnasium. A system of sub-surface tile drainage has been installed. This is covered with cinders and cement, after which maple flooring was laid. When used as a basketball court, bleachers will be erected at both ends of the gymnasium, with a large permanent gallery running the entire length of the building.

In the basement are the domestic science and manual training rooms. Off of the domestic science department will be the cafeteria, which is to be another feature of the building. The cafeteria is so arranged that boys and girls will eat separately, but the two rooms can be thrown together for banquet purposes when needed.

A ventilating system covers the building from top to bottom. In the classrooms, space is given over for coats and hats, and the ventilating system is so arranged that fresh air passes over the clothes constantly while they are hanging in the locker spaces.

A fire alarm system has been installed, and with the large, well-lighted hallways and stairs it is believed that in case of fire the building can be emptied in a few minutes. An emergency lighting system is another feature of the building. In case of fire, or some other cause which would shut off the electricity, the lights in the building immediately secure power from a large storage battery.

Husband of Local Woman Shot to Death By Suitor Who Wrote Notes to Wife

William H. L. Paules, Former Employee Of Furniture Factory, Shot Twice After Ordering Roomer From Home, For Writing Love Notes To His Wife, Formerly Miss Elizabeth Tate.

A love note carelessly discarded in a wastebasket precipitated a tragedy in a Philadelphia rooming house, Thursday, in which the proprietor, William H. L. Paules, husband of Miss Elizabeth Tate, daughter of Mrs. Annie Tate, Troxell apartments, Baltimore street, was shot to death. A roomer at the Paules home, Jesse Stephens, has confessed the murder, according to Philadelphia police.

Paules, a native of York, came to Gettysburg a number of years ago, working as a hand woodcarver at the furniture factory. While living at the home of Lee Mumper, East Middle street, Paules became acquainted with Miss Tate, and they were married here about 15 years ago. About 11 years ago Mr. and Mrs. Paules moved to Philadelphia.

Stephens fired eight shots at Paules on the second floor landing of the house, two of which took effect and caused his death. The roomer then fled.

Stephens, a wounded and shell-shocked World War veteran, was taken into custody two hours later as he entered a building to consult a well known criminal lawyer with offices there. Questioned later at City Hall, the slayer insisted that he had shot Paules in self-defense. There was no evidence to support his claim.

Murder Admitted

He admitted the murder had its origin in his love for Mrs. Paules. She is 35 years old, blonde and markedly attractive. Mrs. Paules betrayed no emotion as she identified her husband's body at the city morgue or when, later, he was questioned at the City Hall Detective Bureau.

Daily Notes Received

From Mrs. Paules police learned that Stephens had addressed love notes to her daily, always placing them under pillows in the rooms he knew she would clean in her routine tasks about the house. The one Paules found yesterday read:

"Elizabeth dearest: The best words in the English language; I love you, baby."

Paules, a woodcarver by trade, had returned earlier than usual for his noonday meal. He happened to glance in a wastebasket, filled with discarded newspapers and trash, and espied a note, scribbled on a large piece of cardboard. Curiosity prompted him to pick it up and examine it. Mrs. Paules' first name is Elizabeth. She had intimated to him previously that Stephens had displayed affections for her.

Incensed at the purport of the note, Paules rushed angrily up the flight of stairs connecting the second and third floors, where he had heard his wife in conversation with a man.

Paules burst into the room from which the sounds were emanating and angrily confronted Stephens, who was sitting on a chair in a bedroom talking to Mrs. Paules, who was making a bed. Both Mrs. Paules and Stephens admitted the latter had been indulging in affectionate terms to her when the husband entered.

Note Causes Quarrel

Paules displayed the note scrawled upon the piece of cardboard.

"Did you write this?" he asked Stephens.

"Yes," said Stephens, with a laugh. "Stop your laughing and get out of here—get out of the house right away. Take everything with you and don't dare to come back. I don't want you in this house a minute longer."

"The missus didn't say that she didn't want me," retorted Stephens, still laughing—this is according to Mrs. Paules' story to the police.

"Get out!" barked Paules.

Stephens laughed again, but left the room. He went to his room on the second floor. Meanwhile Paules and his wife engaged in a heated condemnation of the roomer. Overwhelmed by wrath, Paules told Mrs. Paules that he was going to "fix" Stephens "once and for all." He rushed out of the room and down the steps, according to the police version. As he reached the landing Stephens emerged from his room, a pistol in his hand, and immediately opened fire on the landlord. Stephens fired eight shots from an automatic. Six went wild, but two took effect. One hit Paules in the temple and another punctured his neck. He toppled over, bleeding profusely from both wounds.

Mrs. Paules ran down the steps just as Stephens, his hat and coat in his hands, dashed out the front door on the floor below. She stopped to look at her husband's wounds, then rushed to the front door, but by this time Stephens had disappeared.

Policeman Harry Hess patrolling his beat arrived just as Mrs. Paules was shouting that her husband had been shot. He ran in and found the unconscious landlord on the landing. Hess phoned the police station, four blocks away, for a motor patrol, which took the dying man to the hospital. It was said the bullet in the temple had apparently caused death a minute or two after the shooting.

Hess telephoned to the City Hall Detective Bureau and a squad of detectives was sent to the home to seek the fugitive Stephens. An hour and a half later Sheller learned from Harrisburg Company Granted Permission to Bring Parties Here on Sightseeing Trips.

Local interest is attached to the announcement of the granting of an application to the Harrisburg Sightseeing Bus Company by the public service commission permitting the company to carry passengers on sightseeing trips to any part of the state within a radius of 50 miles of Harrisburg. Local bus people see in the move a plan to meet railroad trains at the Harrisburg stations and transport them to and from historic points, particularly the Gettysburg battlefield.

The company is not permitted to engage in what is known as "call service" of local taxi service. The minimum number of persons to be carried on any one trip is 10. George G. McFarland, B. F. Blough and Shirley R. Watts are the co-partners in the company. Granting of the petition was protested by the Pennsylvania Railroad company, the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad company and the Gettysburg-Harrisburg Transportation company.

The order granting the application specifically states that "the right to transport groups or parties of persons from Harrisburg is restricted to round-trip service which must include trip over the Gettysburg Battlefield."

Drivers, bobs, tables, ladders, kitchen cabinets and miscellaneous furniture in good condition will be sold at Wentz's sale Saturday, March 6.

$100,000 HIGH SCHOOL IS SOON READY FOR USE

Senior Class May Hold Graduation Exercises In New Spacious Auditorium.

With the masonry work completed and much of the carpentry out of the way, rapid progress is being made in the building of Gettysburg's new $100,000 high school at the Playground. Indications at present are that the building may be completed in time for the senior class to hold its graduation exercises in the auditorium.

Plasterers, concreters, carpenters and persons installing the heating plant are now busy at their respective tasks, with all indications pointing to the completion of the building by early spring. The first coat of dark plaster has been given the second floor and much of the first floor.

One of the two large heating units of the vapor system has been placed in operation to warm the building for the workers, and has been found to be working satisfactorily.

Is Modern Building

Built under the rigid plans and specifications of the state department of education, the new building embodies the latest improvements in the art of high school architecture. Large, well-lighted and well-ventilated classrooms will more than amply take care of the present needs of the town's army of high school children, which each year is augmented by many boys and girls from the rural districts.

The auditorium, designed to seat 630 persons, with a large stage at one end, will be one of the features of the new building. Assemblies, high school theatricals and graduation exercises will be held in the auditorium.

In the basement is the gymnasium, with a seating capacity for approximately 600 spectators. Separate locker rooms for boys and girls flank the gymnasium. A system of sub-surface tile drainage has been installed. This is covered with cinders and cement, after which maple flooring was laid. When used as a basketball court, bleachers will be erected at both ends of the gymnasium, with a large permanent gallery running the entire length of the building.

In the basement are the domestic science and manual training rooms. Off of the domestic science department will be the cafeteria, which is to be another feature of the building. The cafeteria is so arranged that boys and girls will eat separately, but the two rooms can be thrown together for banquet purposes when needed.

A ventilating system covers the building from top to bottom. In the classrooms, space is given over for coats and hats, and the ventilating system is so arranged that fresh air passes over the clothes constantly while they are hanging in the locker spaces.

A fire alarm system has been installed, and with the large, well-lighted hallways and stairs it is believed that in case of fire the building can be emptied in a few minutes. An emergency lighting system is another feature of the building. In case of fire, or some other cause which would shut off the electricity, the lights in the building immediately secure power from a large storage battery.

William H. L. Paules, Former Employee Of Furniture Factory, Shot Twice After Ordering Roomer From Home, For Writing Love Notes To His Wife, Formerly Miss Elizabeth Tate.

A love note carelessly discarded in a wastebasket precipitated a tragedy in a Philadelphia rooming house, Thursday, in which the proprietor, William H. L. Paules, husband of Miss Elizabeth Tate, daughter of Mrs. Annie Tate, Troxell apartments, Baltimore street, was shot to death. A roomer at the Paules home, Jesse Stephens, has confessed the murder, according to Philadelphia police.

Paules, a native of York, came to Gettysburg a number of years ago, working as a hand woodcarver at the furniture factory. While living at the home of Lee Mumper, East Middle street, Paules became acquainted with Miss Tate, and they were married here about 15 years ago. About 11 years ago, Mr. and Mrs. Paules moved to Philadelphia.

Stephens fired eight shots at Paules on the second floor landing of the house, two of which took effect and caused his death. The roomer then fled.

Stephens, a wounded and shell-shocked World War veteran, was taken into custody two hours later as he entered a building to consult a well known criminal lawyer with offices there. Questioned later at City Hall, the slayer insisted that he had shot Paules in self-defense. There was no evidence to support his claim.

Murder Admitted

He admitted the murder had its origin in his love for Mrs. Paules. She is 35 years old, blonde and maturely attractive. Mrs. Paules betrayed no emotion as she identified her husband's body at the city morgue or when, later, she was questioned at the City Hall Detective Bureau.

Patients in a private hospital adjoining the rooming house were alarmed by the rapid sequence of pistol shots and occupants of other rooming houses in the area, including scores of college and trade school students, congregated outside the place as police removed the dying man to St. Joseph's Hospital.

Stephens had seized his coat and hat and fled before Mrs. Paules, in hysterical outbursts, gave the first alarm from the steps of the house.

Students joined in a search of the neighborhood for the fugitive slayer, which continued for more than an hour without results. It later developed that Stephens had alternately run and walked to the headquarters of the Veterans Bureau to seek advice from officials there. He had become acquainted with them while under the bureau's care.

They advised him to consult a lawyer and then surrender to the police. At the time neither Stephens nor the bureau officials knew that Paules was dead.

As Stephens proceeded to the attorney's office, the Veterans Bureau called Lieutenant Sheller, of the City Hall Murder Squad, and told him over the telephone where Stephens could be taken into custody. Detectives Tyson and McCaughy were waiting for him when he stepped through the entrance doors. He surrendered.

LOCAL PROTESTS ARE UNAVAILING

Harrisburg Company Granted Permission to Bring Parties
Here on Sightseeing Trips.

Local interest is attached to the announcement of the granting of an application to the Harrisburg Sightseeing Bus Company by the public service commission permitting the company to carry passengers on sightseeing trips to any part of the state within a radius of 50 miles of Harrisburg. Local bus people see in the move a plan to meet railroad trains at the Harrisburg stations and transport them to and from historic points, particularly the Gettysburg battlefield.

The company is not permitted to engage in what is known as "call service" of local taxi service. The minimum number of persons to be carried on any one trip is 10. George G. McFarland, B. F. Blough and Shirley R. Watts are the co-partners in the company. Granting of the petition was protested by the Pennsylvania Railroad company, the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad company and the Gettysburg-Harrisburg Transportation company.

The order granting the application specifically states that "the right to transport groups or parties of persons from Harrisburg is restricted to round-trip service which must include trip over the Gettysburg Battlefield."

Dressers, beds, tables, buffets, kitchen cabinets and miscellaneous furniture in good condition will be sold at Wentz's sale Saturday, March 6.

Daily Notes Received

From Mrs. Paules police learned that Stephens had addressed love notes to her daily, always placing them under pillows in the rooms he knew she would clean in her routine tasks about the house. The one Paules found yesterday read:

"Elizabeth dearest: The best words in the English language; I love you, baby."

Paules, a woodcarver by trade, had returned earlier than usual for his noonday meal. He happened to glance in a wastebasket, filled with discarded newspapers and trash, and espied a note, scribbled on a large piece of cardboard. Curiosity prompted him to pick it up and examine it. Mrs. Paules' first name is Elizabeth. She had intimated to him previously that Stephens had displayed affections for her.

Incensed at the purport of the note, Paules rushed angrily up the flight of stairs connecting the second and third floors, where he had heard his wife in conversation with a man.

Paules burst into the room from which the sounds were emanating and angrily confronted Stephens, who was sitting on a chair in a bedroom talking to Mrs. Paules, who was making a bed. Both Mrs. Paules and Stephens admitted the latter had been indulging in affectionate terms to her when the husband entered.

Note Causes Quarrel

Paules displayed the note scrawled upon the piece of cardboard.

"Did you write this?" he asked Stephens.

"Yes," said Stephens, with a laugh. "Stop your laughing and get out of here—get out of the house right away. Take everything with you and don't dare to come back. I don't want you in this house a minute longer."

"The missus didn't say that she didn't want me," responded Stephens, still laughing—this is according to Mrs. Paules' story to the police.

"Get out!" barked Paules. Stephens laughed again, but left the room. He went to his room on the second floor. Meanwhile Paules and his wife engaged in a heated condemnation of the roomer. Overwhelmed by wrath, Paules told Mrs. Paules that he was going to "fix" Stephens "once and for all." He rushed out of the room and down the steps, according to the police version. As he reached the landing Stephens emerged from his room, a pistol in his hand, and immediately opened fire on the landlord. Stephens fired eight shots from an automatic. Six went wild, but two took effect. One hit Paules in the temple and another punctured his neck. He toppled over, bleeding profusely from both wounds.

Mrs. Paules ran down the steps just as Stephens, his hat and coat in his hands, dashed out the front door on the floor below. She stopped to look at her husband's wounds, then rushed to the front door, but by this time Stephens had disappeared.

Policeman Harry Hess patrolling his beat arrived just as Mrs. Paules was shouting that "her husband had been shot. He ran in and found the unconscious landlord on the landing. Hess 'phoned the police station, four blocks away, for a motor patrol, which took the dying man to the hospital. It was said the bullet in the temple had apparently caused death a minute or two after the shooting.

Hess telephoned to the City Hall Detective Bureau and a squad of detectives was sent to the home to seek the fugitive Stephens. An hour and a half later Sheller learned from (Continued on Second Page)

he Veterans Bureau that Stephens could appear soon at the office of the lawyer, and his arrest came about through this information.

Stephens' version of the murder was predicated upon a basis of self-defense.

"Paules came into the room as I was sitting talking to Mrs. Paules, he was making a bed," he said. There was nothing between us. He knew that. The notes were just a joke, that's all.

"When he asked me if I had written he one he had found in the wastebasket I laughed and said I had. But he got mad and told me to get out. Realizing that he misunderstood and was angry, I decided to go down to my room. I came here from Keola, Oklahoma, about five weeks ago, and brought an automatic I had purchased out there for protection. "I didn't dream of using the weapon until I heard Paules coming down the stairs swearing and shouting: 'Well, my man, I'm going to fix you now for good and all.'"

"Then I decided to put the automatic in my pocket. I looked through the door. He had the cardboard in his right hand, but no weapon in his left. I went out to meet him, intending to explain to him that there was no reason why he should feel angry toward me.

"But as I moved toward him, he again declared that he was going to 'fix' me, and shifted the cardboard from his right hand to his left, at the same time whipping his right hand toward his hip pocket. I thought he was going to draw a pistol, and because of the bitter look on his face I grew frightened, drew my own gun, and opened fire. I fired eight shots, then turned back into my room, grabbed my coat and hat and ran out of the house. I went to the Veterans Bureau and was later arrested.

Mrs. Paules said she told her husband in their brief discussion of the love note before the fatal shooting that she had found others of a similar nature from Stephens daily since the latter had taken a room in the house, but that she had ignored them all. She denied she had invited Stephens to the upper floor. He insisted she had.

Paules was thirty-nine years old. Stephens is also thirty-nine. He has light hair, blue eyes and sharp features. His left arm is five inches shorter than his right, the result of shrapnel wounds during the war.

Mrs. Catharine Hartnett, proprietor of another boarding house, nearby, said the Paules had bought the house next door about a year ago, and that they never had any trouble with roomers, so far as she knew. She said the Paules were "very fond of each other."

Mrs. Paules' mother, Mrs. Tate, was informed of the murder Wednesday afternoon, and left at once for Philadelphia.

Paules' body may be returned here for burial.

Garage Man Near Lexington, Ky., Jail Charges More Than 200 Persons to See Execution.

(By Associated Press.)

Lexington, Ky., March 5.—Ed. Harris, negro, was hanged in the county jail here this morning at 6:17. He was convicted of attacking Mrs. Margaret Bryant on January 21, after he had slain her husband and two children. The negro was pronounced dead at 6:30 a. m.

The court yard was crowded with people who viewed the hanging. 200 more persons who could not gain admittance witnessed the hanging from a nearby garage at $2 a seat.

The negro mounted the scaffold calmly and prepared to address the crowd but his voice faltered. "Just—just tell them good-bye," was all he could say.

The case created unusual interest throughout the state and after the negro was captured guardsmen were called out to protect him. Prisoners on one occasion threatened to lynch him. The negro requested that two Bibles be buried with his body.

Although hope has been abandoned that the family has survived the days of exposure, the searchers hope to find evidence as to the fate of the five. Mail carriers who make trips to the island twice a week have reported that they have seen no trace of the automobile along the route.

There is a large stretch of open water near the ice road ten miles from the island and this was being dragged today.

AS IT HAS GONE

Madly in love with Roxalanne de Lavedan, whom he had wooed to win on the challenge of Count Chateaufort, Bardelys the Magnificent finds himself under the assumed name of Lesperon, a rebel pronounced dead, enjoying the hospitality of the house of Lavedan, where he had come sorely wounded after being attacked by a group of the King's guard who believed him to be a rebel. Papers found on his person, given him by the dying rebel, Lesperon, were accepted as being his by the Vicomte de Lavedan, in sympathy with the rebellion. Bardelys humiliates the Chevalier de Saint-Eustache, a braggart, in the presence of Roxalanne. Bardelys finds his family name unpopular at Lavedan and learns that Chateaufort has betrayed his purpose and cheated. A growing intimacy has sprung up between Bardelys and Roxalanne. During a boat ride on the river Bardelys realizes the futility of his base deception on the innocent Roxalanne with deep regret and decides to leave. He thinks of disclosing his real identity but fears the result. In agony of soul he tells Roxalanne he must depart.

"There is much, mademoiselle, much, indeed, to hold me firmly at Lavedan," I pursued at last. "But my obligations demand of me that I depart."

"You mean the Cause," she cried. "But, believe me, you can do nothing. To sacrifice yourself cannot profit it. Infinitely better

The little hand I held trembled in my grasp.

you can serve the Duke by waiting until the time is ripe for another blow. And how can you better preserve your life than by remaining at Lavedan until the persecutions are at an end?"

"I was not thinking of the Cause, mademoiselle, but of myself alone—of my own personal honour. I would that I could explain; but I am afraid," I ended lamely.

"Afraid?" she echoed, now raising her eyes in wonder.

"Aye, afraid. Afraid of your contempt, of your scorn."

The wonder in her glance increased and asked a question that I could not answer. I stretched forward, and caught one of the hands lying idle in her lap.

"Roxalanne"—I murmured very gently, and my tone, my touch, and the use of her name drove her eyes for refuge behind their lids again. A flush spread upon the ivory palor of her face, to fade as swiftly, leaving it very white. Her bosom rose and fell in agitation, and the little hand I held trembled in my grasp. There was a moment's silence. Not that I had need to think or choose my words. But there was a lump in my throat—aye, I take no shame in confessing it, for this was the first time that a good and true emotion had been vouchsafed me since the Duchesse de Bourgogne had shattered my illusions ten years ago.

"Roxalanne," I resumed presently, when I was more master of myself. "We have been good friends, you and I, since that night when I climbed for shelter to your chamber, have we not?"

"But yes, monsieur," she faltered.

"Ten days ago it is. Think of it—no more than ten days. And it seems as if I had been months at Lavedan, so well have we become acquainted. In these ten days we have formed opinions of each other. But with this difference, that whilst mine are right, yours are wrong. I have come to know you for the sweetest, gentlest saint in all this world. Would to God I had known you earlier! It might have been very different; I might have been—I would have been—different, and I would not have done what I have done. You have come to know me for an unfortunate but honest gentleman. Such am I not. I am under false colours here, mademoiselle. Unfortunately I may be—at least, of late I seem to have become so. Honest I am not—I have not been. There, child, I can tell you no more. I am too great a coward. But when later you shall come to hear the truth—when, after I am gone, they may tell you a strange story touching this fellow Lesperon who sought the hospitality of your father's house—bethink you of my restraint in this hour; bethink you of my departure—You will understand these things perhaps afterwards. But bethink you of them, and you will unravel them for yourself, perhaps. Be merciful upon me then; judge me not over-harshly."

I paused, and for a moment we were silent. Then suddenly she looked up; her fingers tightened upon mine.

"Monsieur de Lesperon," she pleaded, "of what do you speak? You are torturing me, monsieur."

"Look in my face, Roxalanne. Can you see nothing there of how I am torturing myself?"

"Then tell me, monsieur," she begged, her voice a very caress of suppliant softness. "Tell me what vexes you and sets a curb upon your tongue. You exaggerate, I am assured. You could do nothing dishonourable, nothing vile."

"I would still, my wits busily working, my face impassive under his scrutinizing glance. In a flash it came to me that this must be the writer of some of the letters Lesperon had given me, the original of the miniature I carried

As I was silent I grew suddenly conscious of another pair of eyes observing me—Mademoiselle's. She remembered what I had said, she may have remembered how I had cried out the wish that I had met her earlier, and she may not have been slow to find an interpretation for my words. I could have groaned in my rage at such a misinterpretation. I could have taken the Chevalier round to the other side of the chateau and killed him with the greatest relish in the world. But I restrained myself, I resigned myself to be misunderstood. What choice had I?

"Monsieur de Saint-Eustache," said I very coldly, and looking him straight between his close-set eyes. "I have permitted you many liberties, but there is one that I cannot permit any one—and, much as I honour you, I can make no exception in your favour. That is to interfere in my concerns and presume to dictate to me the manner in which I shall conduct them. Be good enough to hear that in my memory."

In a moment he was all servility. The sneer passed out of his face, the arrogance out of his demeanour. He became as full of smiles and capers as the meanest sycophant.

"You will forgive me, monsieur!" he cried, spreading his hands, and with the humblest smile in the world. "I perceive that I have taken a great liberty; yet you have misunderstood its purpose. I sought to sound you touching the wisdom of a step upon which I have ventured."

"That is, monsieur?" I asked, throwing back my head, with the scent of danger breast high.

"I took it upon myself to-day to mention the fact that you are alive and well to one who had a right, I thought, to know of it, and who is coming hither to-morrow."

"That was a presumption you may regret," said I between my teeth. "To whom do you impart this information?"

"To your friend, Monsieur de Marsac," he answered, and through his mask of humility the sneer was again growing apparent. "He will be here to-morrow," he repeated.

Marsac was that friend of Lesperon's to whose warm commendation of the Gascon rebel I owed the courtesy and kindness that the Vicomte de Lavedan had meted out to me since my coming.

Is it wonderful that I stood as if frozen, my wits refusing to work and my countenance wearing, I doubt not, a very stricken look? Here was one coming to Lavedan who knew Lesperon—one who would unmask me and say that I was an impostor. What would happen then? A spy they would of a certainty account me, and that they would make short work of me I never doubted. But that was something that troubled me less than the opinion Mademoiselle must form. How would she interpret what I had said that day? In what light would she view me hereafter?

avowal had lain on either side. I strange wooing had been mine—a wooing that precluded the possibility of winning, and yet a wooing that had won. Aye, it had won; but it might not take. I made due distinctions and quaint paradoxes as I tugged at my oars, for the human mind is a curiously complex thing, and with some of us there is no such spur to honour as the sting of pain.

Roxalanne sat white and very thoughtful, but with veiled eyes, so that I might guess nothing of what passed within her mind. At last we reached the chateau, and as I brought the boat to the terrace steps, it was Saint-Eustache who came forward to offer his wrist to Mademoiselle. He noted the pallor of her face, and darted me a quick, suspicion-laden glance. As we were walking towards the chateau—

"Monsieur de Lesperon," said he in a curious tone, "do you know that a rumour of your death is current in the province?"

"I had hope that such a rumour might get abroad when I disappeared," I answered calmly.

"And you have taken no single step to contradict it?"

"Why should I, since in that rumour may be said to lie my safety?"

"Nevertheless, monsieur, voyons. Surely you might at least relieve the anxieties—the affliction. I might almost say—of those who are mourning you."

"Ah!" said I. "And who may these be?"

He shrugged his shoulders and pursed his lips in a curiously deprecatory smile. With a sidelong glance at Mademoiselle—

"Do you need that I name Mademoiselle de Marsac?" he sneered. I stood still, my wits busily working, my face impassive under his scrutinizing glance. In a flash it came to me that this must be the writer of some of the letters Lesperon had given me, the original of the miniature I carried

G-BURG NINE TO BATTLE U. OF P.

Nineteen Games on Schedule; Many Long Trips to be Made; Strong Pitching Staff.

With the basketball season closing this week, Gettysburg College students have already turned the spotlight upon the baseball outlook and Manager Harter is completing the schedule.

There will be about nineteen games on the 1926 schedule, although the complete lineup of games has not yet been announced. The opening game will be with Mt. St. Mary's at Emmitsburg, Maryland, on April 17. A number of important trips will feature the new schedule. On April 23 and 24 the squad will go to Penn State to meet Gettysburg's old opponent in two games. This year, through the double series, an attempt will be made to break the jinx and to change the narrow scores which have marked Penn State's victories over the Orange and Blue.

In the first week of May the team will go South, where it will play the Navy, St. John's and the Quantico Marines. The game with the Navy is at Annapolis on May 3, that with Quantico Marines at Quantico, Virginia, on May 6. On May 14 and 15 the squad will move to Bucknell and Susquehanna.

Another important game is with the University of Pennsylvania on Franklin Field, Philadelphia, on May 26. This will be the first game with Penn in almost twenty years.

Of last year's squad enough material remains around which Coach Ira Plank hopes to make the Gettysburg team this season a winning combination. Lefty Rinehart is back and will be hard at work to hold his old berth in the pitcher's box. Silent Al Jones will also qualify, and a new man, Mortimer, from Bucknell, is expected to show up in good form for this position. Shull, who comes from Lewistown, is also said to have good possibilities. Bucky Williams, Dream, Filbert, Craun and a number of others from last year's squad will also appear for training.

Of the new men Hubbsack, Challenger and Wolfinger will be out for infield berths. Heiges, of Gettysburg High School, will make a strong bid for first base.

Nineteen Games on Schedule; Many Long Trips to be Made; Strong Pitching Staff.

With the basketball season closing this week, Gettysburg College students have already turned the spotlight upon the baseball outlook and Manager Harter is completing the schedule.

Another important game is with the University of Pennsylvania on Franklin Field, Philadelphia, on May 26. This will be the first game with Penn in almost twenty years.

Of last year's squad enough material remains around which Coach Ira Plank hopes to make the Gettysburg team this season a winning combination. Lefty Rinehart is back and will be hard at work to hold his old berth in the pitcher's box. Silent Al Jones will also qualify, and a new man, Mortimer, from Bucknell, is expected to show up in good form for this position. Shull, who comes from Lewistown, is also said to have good possibilities. Bucky Williams, Bream, Filbert, Craun and a number of others from last year's squad will also appear for training.

Of the new men Hubisack, Chal-

McSHERRYSTOWN

McSherrystown.—Remarkable progress made by the McSherrystown Fire Company during the past two years was shown in the reports presented at the annual meeting of the company which was held in the engine house Wednesday evening with an unusually large number of members in attendance. Under the leadership of F. V. Topper, who retires after serving for two years as president of the company, the organization accumulated a building fund of $3,379.49, a sinking fund of $92.79 and a sick relief fund of $614.05, which figures represent net amounts as reported at the meeting.

F. V. Topper retires to be succeeded by his brother, H. E. Topper, who was nominated without opposition at the last monthly meeting of the company. The annual election of officers was a mere formality, resulting in the election of all officers as nominated with one exception, the office of first assistant fire chief, that being the only case in which there was any opposition. H. J. Small was named for that office. The other nominee was John Eline, Jr.

The success of the company was outlined by the retiring president in the reading of his report of the two years in which he served. He congratulated the members upon the progress made possible through the interest and cooperation manifest by them during the two years, which were so successful, thanked them and asked that the same spirit of cooperation be extended to the new president as had been accorded him. On motion a rising vote of thanks was given Mr. Topper for his faithful service in the past by the firemen present. Affairs were then turned over to the new president.

The secretary, Edward F. Poist, presented an annual report. The auditors were Charles Jacoby, J. Preston Smith and H. E. Topper. Two new members, William Hombach and Harry Miller, were received into the company.

GREEN'S FOLLY

We put up a prize for the largest fish, and the trip was over and done.
And the money we'd paid when the fish were weighed, for Green's was the largest one.
And the rods were packed, and the goods were stacked, and we'd only an hour to wait.
When Green said: "Oh, I would like to go for a few more casts with fate."

"Will one of you men come out with me?" But each of them shook his head.

"We've packed our stuff, and we've had enough, and the time's too short," they said.

Said Green: "Take note, I will row the boat for the one who is game to go."
Then Chappy rose, and he said: "Here goes. Get out in the boat and row."

Let Green now tell what next took place. With the first cast Chapman made

He hooked a trout that was just about three times what his own catch weighed.

And those minutes few on the waters blue, which he'd coaxed his friend to share.

Cost the fifty beans which were in his jeans, for the prize changed hands right there.

Oh, the moral's plain. When the prize is yours, though you've still an hour to wait,

When the contest's done and men say you've won, don't further risk with fate.

Don't coax men out on the stream for trout. Hang on to the joy you own.

Sit down content in your shack or tent, and let well enough alone!

Mothers everywhere are learning that there is a definite and approved knowledge about child feeding.

Only recently, however, has it been realized by child health specialists themselves that the early growth years is the most important period of physical development.

The greatest attention, they declare, should be focused at this time upon the selection of certain foods, growth foods, that contain just the right essentials for growth and health during these vital years.

More quantity of food does not promote either growth or health in children.

Neither does a large variety of food, if it fails to include an adequate proportion of the elements most needed during the growth years.

Mother's Oats, with milk, contains a liberal amount of the essential which contributes more to growth in children than any other one element in food—the tissue-building substance known as protein. A name, by the way, which comes from the Greek word "proteus" and means "to be first place."

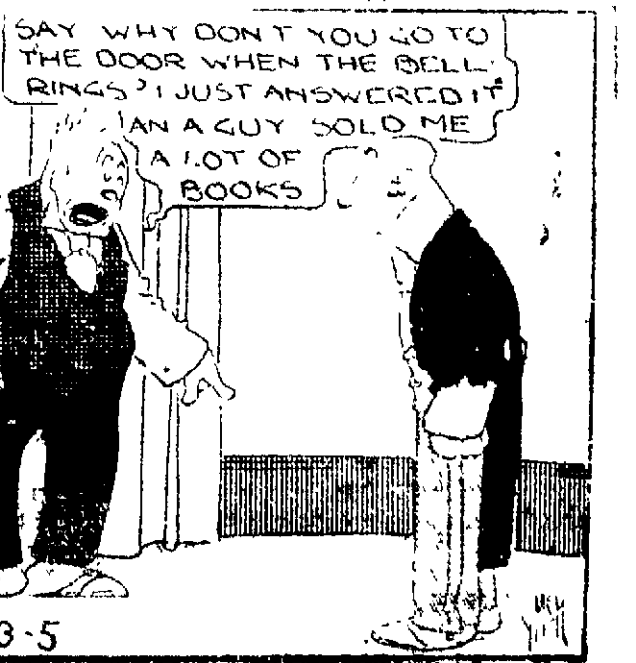

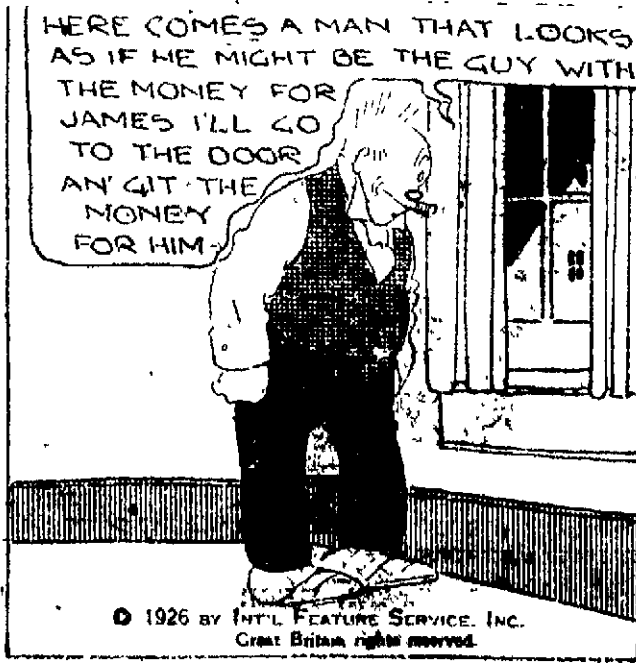

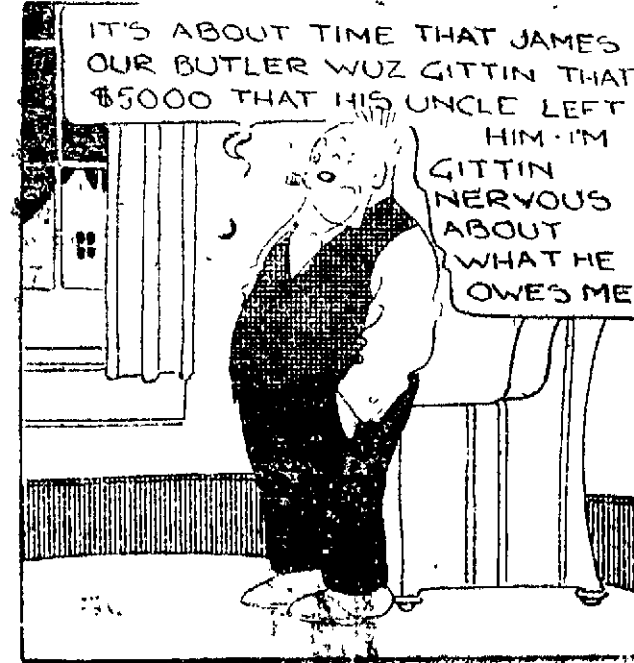

Mother should attach the utmost importance to these growth-promoting protein foods that children need especially during the growing age.

The one thing of great importance that mothers should know is that growing children cannot develop new body cells except from tissue-building foods.

It is, therefore, desirable to know the growth foods . . . those that contain protein in helpful amounts . . . and how much of the child's daily requirement is supplied by the amount you serve.

Mother's Oats with milk—one cup of each, furnishes 23% or nearly one-fourth of the amount of the tissue-forming protein needed daily during the growth years.

Erie County Is Freezing, With Mercury 16 Below

(By Associated Press.)
Erie, March 5.—With the mercury registering 16 degrees below zero in some parts of the county and fluctuating between zero and ten below in others, Erie county today is in the throes of an unusual cold spell which swept down from the Canadian wilderness last night.

Mothers

everywhere are learning that there is a definite and approved knowledge about child feeding.

Only recently, however, has it been realized by child health specialists themselves that the early growth years is the most important period of physical development.

The greatest attention, they declare, should be focused at this time upon the selection of certain foods, growth foods, that contain just the right essentials for growth and health during these vital years.

Mere quantity of food does not promote either growth or health in children.

Neither does a large variety of food, if it fails to include an adequate proportion of the elements most needed during the growth years.

Mother's Oats, with milk, contains a liberal amount of the one essential which contributes more to growth in children than any other one element in food—the tissue-building substance known as protein. A name, by the way, which comes from the Greek word "proteus" and means "to hold first place."

Mother should attach the utmost importance to these growth-promoting protein foods that children need especially during the growing age.

The one thing of great importance that mothers should know is that growing children cannot develop new body cells except from tissue-building foods.

It is, therefore, desirable to know the growth foods... those that contain protein in helpful amounts... and how much of the child's daily requirement is supplied by the amount you serve.

Mother's Oats with milk, one cup of each, furnishes 23% or nearly one-fourth of the amount of the tissue-forming protein needed daily during the growth years.
